Richard Dennis, Chicago commodities superstar famous for turning $400 into $200 million, bet a friend that he could turn anyone into a successful trader. The result: a band of rich disciples known as "Turtles" ready to teach you a trading system based on money management and market trends. The course, which includes a manual, cd-rom, and support through e-mail, costs $999. Expensive, but as the turtles are quick to point out, less than any course at most universities. The site is more than just a sales pitch. Articles, data, and performance measures back up the Turtle's strategies and stories.

BEST: No guesses, no scams. The site is backed by proven performance and recommendations from traders at some top Wall Street firms.

WORST: The homepage is a mess. There are so many links and it is so disorganized you don't know where to begin.
